Background:

A week after the November 4, 2015 incident students came together at the Students of Color Conference in Berkeley and began conversations on the necessity of our campus having safe spaces for marginalized identity communities (of color, LGBTQIA+, etc.) to go to in times of crisis. At the Students of Color Conference, students quickly realized that our campus is the ONLY University of California without a cultural center, yet our campus is often marketed as, “the most diverse UC”. Upon returning from the Students of Color Conference a student coalition was created with the purpose of ensuring that a cultural center finally be built on our campus! We have been meeting weekly since the end of November 2015 and discussing space availability options, the purpose of a cultural center on our campus, the intended programs/initiatives/education aspects of the space, the clubs/students/faculty/departments that would be involved, and why we desperately need safe spaces on our campus. We define “safe spaces” as place for marginalized communities to gather without restriction or regulation (from those who do not understand the issues we face) where we feel safe enough to communicate the intersecting types of oppression, prejudice, racism, sexism, macroaggressions, phobias, and violence we consistently face on our campus—an institution that was not made for us.

We recognize that what our campus really needs is a building where many different communities have their own individual offices/“safe spaces” yet are accessible to one another for allyship and coalition building (good examples of this are UCSB’s Student Resource Center and UCD’s Cross Cultural Center). We have met with and addressed our concerns to a number of administration with demands for a building in the 2020 project but have been rejected with the same three words: “you’re too late”. But we weren’t too late. Conversations, demands and proposals for a center like this have been in the works for over eight years. LAMBDA sent in a proposal for space like this in 2008, another group sent in a similar proposal in 2009 (instead of a center, the Social Justice Initiatives department in OSL was a direct result from this group), BSU, LAMBDA, and a few more groups made similar demands just last year through protests and written demands directly to Chancellor Leland yet they continue to tell us that we’re too late.

We decided to call this space The Intercultural Hub because "intercultural" means that communication, education, and learning both across and between different cultures and identities. We decided to use the word "hub" instead of "center" because as of right now, our campus has no physical space for a center and our temporary space will be no larger than a room, which is not enough to be called a "center". We are still fighting for a center (aka a building) but getting the hub on campus is our most immediate opportunity and we need space now! Once we have a building, then it will be called a "center".
